Googerty

telephone interview from his California home. With the revival of interest in traditional blacksmithing over the last 30 years, interest in Googerty's work has increased from blacksmiths who are looking for inspiration, he said. "All of Googerty's instruction books are back in print, and have been for years," Miller said Those books, the museum brochure notes, "helped shape the character of twentieth century American blacksmithing."

Illinois Valley Blacksmithing Association members, in fact, will remove and transport the gates to the museum, where they will be restored. Representatives came here last fall and spent about eight hours measuring the gates, inspecting their condition and asking questions about them, said James Melvin, cemetery sexton. While the gates are gone, city workers will restore, realign and tuckpoint the columns on which the gates are mounted at the cemetery entrance

Museum Director James A Wallace said it was likely a good deal of disassembly will be required for the restoration of the gates Some gate elements, damaged by vehicles over the years, will be straightened Wallace, in a telephone interview, said he did not think there would be any need to forge and splice in new parts

The restored gates will be given a high-tech, durable finish-and a protection coat, using materials not available to Googerty, and which should make the gates serve for many decades to come at the cemetery, Wallace said

"We're hoping to have these right near the front entrance," he said of the gates' display They will be mounted on temporary columns, probably at the head of the driveway to the museum or opposite the museum's front entrance in a sculpture area. Wallace said the gates are intended to make an impression on arriving visitors. About 10,000 normally visit the museum during the time the exhibit is scheduled About 42,000 visit the museum annually.

"Googerty was relatively well known in professional circles when he was alive," Wallace said When ironwork went out of style, his reputation was lost, but with the current renewed interest in ironwork now was a good time for the exhibit, he said "His work as a craftsman and teacher have never been totally lost by those who work in the field," Wallace said. In addition to his books, Googerty wrote "how to" articles on technique and the importance of design

Wallace said there are a handful of well-known names of 20th Century American metalworkers, because of the large amount of work they produced and the publicity they sought Googerty was not among them, according to Wallace.

"He was an extremely dedicated man," Wallace said "He did a lot of good, not only for the city of Pontiac, but for metalworking in the United States."

Miller said that Googerty and his students produced a "prodigious" amount of work over the decades at the reformatory, including "a vast quantity of museum-grade student work." Most of that is now scattered, although Miller knows there is a lot of Googerty work "in and around Pontiac" in private hands Besides the city cemetery gates, the gates at St Mary's Cemetery and the Legion Billet are Googerty work, Miller noted

Preparation of the Googerty exhibit is continuing at the metal museum, which hopes to recover some of his previously unknown or underappreciated ironwork

"By tracing the influences of this quiet, reform-minded artist-craftsman," the exhibit brochure says, "we will explore some of the varied and often overlooked channels of art and artisanship that have sustained and enriched American culture"

Troops

unless the warring parties, which will sit down to peace talks in France on Saturday, agree to stop fighting

And while he said that no decision had been reached on the deployment of U S troops, he seemed sure that their presence would be required to help enforce a deal

"If a settlement is reached, a NATO presence on the ground in Kosovo could prove essential in giving both sides the confidence they need to pull back," Clinton said. "If that happens, we are seriously considering the possibility of our participation in such a force."

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright was expanding on the administration's posture toward Kosovo in a policy speech today

Albright is offering assurances any American ground troops sent to Kosovo would be part of an international force and would not be sent in until there is a settlement and cease-fire

The administration's national security team has been making the rounds on Capitol Hill laying groundwork for such a deployment in case a peace plan is adopted

"I do not at this time support ground troops in Kosovo, because I do not know what the game plan is," Sen Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas, said after a briefing by Albright and Defense Secretary William Cohen "I do not know what the exit strategy is, and I don't know how many of our forces would be involved"

Later, Albright made a hastily arranged decision to deliver a major policy address on Kosovo to a foreign policy group today the Democratic alternative would be written less legalistically than the articles of impeachment "and more in moral terms of censure"

Impeach

The "finding of fact" proposal pushed by some Republicans accuses Clinton of lying to the grand jury. They would like to vote on that before the actual articles of impeachment

Lott predicted that videotaped depositions of Ms. Lewinsky, Jordan and Blumenthal will be made public
